

Crime victims have rights, too!

Criminal defendants are not the only individuals in the legal system who have rights.

In fact, crime victims have a variety of specific rights established under a state law known as the "Crime Victims Act."

You have the right to:

- ▶ Information on services available to crime victims.
- ▶ Notification of important developments in your case.
- ▶ Have someone go with you to hearings about your case.
- ▶ Give a statement on the impact the crime had on you and your family.
- ▶ Help in filing for victim compensation benefits.
- ▶ Have any property taken returned to you.

Contact a victim service agency or District Attorney's Office for more information.

The Pennsylvania Commission on Crime and Delinquency cares about crime victims and their families.

Financial Assistance for Victims of Crime

Crime victims have a place to turn for help

The Victims Compensation Assistance Program helps victims and their families ease the financial burdens they may face as a result of crime.

Although compensation will not erase the fact that a crime has occurred, it can help victims to begin the healing and recovery process.

This brochure provides a brief overview of the Victims Compensation Assistance Program. It is not intended to serve as a complete list of services that are available to crime victims.

There may be factors other than those listed in this brochure that may determine whether you qualify for compensation.

For complete details, please contact your local victim service agency, or the Victims Compensation Assistance Program at 1-800-233-2339.
